Programme Features

International Research Vision

A significant portion of our teachers are full-time professors, who have contributed substantially to the international reputation of HKU with their magnificent work of scholarship and global vision. They will help students develop research techniques and critical thinking by exploring translation from cultural, linguistic, and theoretical perspectives. After attending their courses, students will not only be able to translate to a professional standard, but they will also know how to conduct research at an international level, which is essential to translation and interpreting studies as well as mid-senior level jobs which require extraordinary analytical skills and global vision.

Professional Experience

Our part-time Lecturers have been professional translators and/or interpreters for two to three decades, in addition to their considerable teaching experience at the professional, undergraduate and/or postgraduate level. They will guide students through the learning journeys of translation and interpreting with their practical experience and insider knowledge.

Translation & Interpreting Prizes

The “MA in Translation Prize” (翻譯文科碩士獎) will be awarded annually to final year MAT students who have achieved the required academic results and attendance. Up to three prizes ($10,000 each) will be awarded.

One-to-one Project Supervision

The capstone project requires each student to translate a text or analyse an interpreting video under the supervision of a teacher. Each student will receive individual attention to their work and learning progress.

Award-winning Teaching Website and App

Our award-winning website “Resources for Interpreting” (<http://www.interpreting.hku.hk/>) and the mobile app “Newssary” (<https://play.google.com/store/apps/details?id=interpreting.hku.glossary&hl=en>) keep students up to date with the latest bilingual terms on trending news. The online resources also enhance their subject knowledge by offering various educational and practice materials.
