

A Brief Introduction of the Undergraduate Programmes Offered by the School of Chinese, HKU

For further information of the programmes, please visit:

<http://web.chinese.hku.hk/main/resources/handbook/>

Chinese History and Culture

The Chinese History and Culture programme provides students with solid and critical training in China's history and its cultural tradition. Students can choose, and mix and match courses on China's imperial dynasties and their institutions, or courses on Chinese philosophy, religions, or other aspects of China's cultural life.

In this way they can build up their own expertise on China, be it on early China, Tang or Song China, or Ming-Qing China, or on Chinese religions, Chinese thought, or Chinese material culture.

Chinese Language and Literature

Chinese Language and Literature is not only among the earliest undergraduate programmes offered by HKU, but also has the longest history among similar programmes in Hong Kong universities. The Programme features two key components: The “language” component focuses on the study and research of the Chinese language from the perspective of linguistics, while the “literature” component encompasses topics in classical and modern Chinese literature, literary theory, literary history, as well as creative writing.

The Programme provides students with the analytical skills to critically evaluate and appraise scholarly views on controversial issues in Chinese language and literature. The language courses provide students with an understanding of the structure and evolution of Chinese language, as well as its cognitive and social functions in communicative and interactional contexts. The literature courses enable students to read and interpret literary works of different periods and genres, to gain a sound knowledge in relevant intellectual development, and to develop an appreciation for the aesthetics encompassed in Chinese literature. Graduates of the Programme are not only equipped with a high proficiency in the Chinese language, but also have a comprehensive understanding of a broad range of subjects in Chinese studies.

Translation

We have been teaching translation since the 1930s and endeavour to bridge cultures through translation.

The Programme prepares you a professional translator career. You will learn the essential skills and knowledge in translation practice, theories and criticism, as well as fundamental interpreting, with a team of seasoned translators and scholars.

Our graduates have gained high recognition by their employers, which typically include government organizations, international companies and other sectors such as journalism, cultural industries, education and so on.

